PREFACE

The purpose of this endeavor is to gather an organized record of Andrea's art work. Due to her unexpected sudden death, she did not complete a comprehensive list of the paintings she had created nor where they were.

Several of us sifted through her card files, partial lists, framing receipts, purchase information and many slides to put together as complete a record as possible. Many pictures had art show entry tags on the back which yielded titles and dates. We contacted many owners for photos of their pieces and are thankful for their willing cooperation.

In the final result we have a far from a perfect product. Quite a few unframed and unidentified paintings were found in storage in the home. We found photos or slides for which we had no identification. The photos in the catalog are of mixed quality; some not on photo paper or with glare or the camera flash showing. Some photos Andy had professionally taken and are of extremely good quality. Some of the five that were used for greeting cards are represented by those cards.

A chronological art list, which contains further information about the paintings, is located at the end of the display. Because we received a lot more information about the paintings after my niece Laura Freeze had completed a first draft some years ago, we inserted the new information in her draft, which resulted in having sub numbers for some numbers. The last number is 189 but there are 257, counting the 16 library stained glass windows with Roman numerals, located at the end. In addition there are 45 painting titles mentioned in the various notes for which we have no known images and these are listed at the end of the chronological art list. Also, because of spacing, some of the newly found paintings are not in chronological order.

The Wallace barn was included many times in her work so I have included two photos of the buildings (one is circa 1985, and the other is summer 1996) and a newspaper picture (1988) of her painting while perched on a large cut stone located in the east yard of her home with the Wallace barn in the background.

Many thanks for the help of many of the paintings' owners. And of course, Laura's early work furnished the foundation for this final version, which Donna Bowers and I put together.

Andrea Meidinger VanHorne

Andrea was born in Lodi, California on July 11th, 1940. Her parents, Roland and Clara (Lehr) Meidinger moved back to their native North Dakota shortly thereafter and Andrea attended Jamestown public schools. Thereafter, she graduated from Macalester College in St. Paul, Minnesota in 1962 in fine arts and teaching. She spent her final semester attending a co-op program at Minneapolis School of Art and Design in Minneapolis.

Thereafter, she married Grant VanHorne, and moved with him to his native state of Indiana. She attended John Herron Art Institute in Indianapolis and received a MS from Butler University as part of a coop program.

They then moved to Auburn, Indiana in 1963. About 1973, once all three of her children had started in school, she began her teaching career at DeKalb High School with classes mostly in drawing and painting. She taught a few classes in art history, in which she particularly excelled. At that time she also started in earnest with her painting efforts. After retiring in 1995 from DeKalb she taught as an instructor at IU-PU in Ft. Wayne and had her most prolific period as a watercolorist.

She died suddenly in her home of a pulmonary embolism on November 29, 2000.

ANDREA'S METHODOLOGY AND CREATIVE INTENT

As a serious student of art history, a painter, and an art teacher, Andrea was introspective about her approach to painting, she wrote:

"My art is based upon my knowledge and understanding of natural forms and places I am familiar with. I am traditional in my approach to realistic painting. I am attempting to show my unique reaction to objects and places while, at the same time, communicating that truth to others!

My work does not imitate nature. I am not interested in photo realism and have resisted ever using a camera as a tool to reduce the scope of a picture field of awareness. The camera is used to record details by many artists, but I feel that the eye views that visual awareness differently.

It is important for my well-being to be outdoors a part of every day. My winter paintings seem to be appreciated by others, perhaps because it is my favorite season, and I feel most energetic and alert during that time of the year. My favorite months to paint are November and April because the structure of buildings and trees are easily seen. It is then possible to paint outdoors comfortably.

The first step in planning a painting is a detailed working drawing. I will spend an average of eight hours working up the scale of the painting. I consider my draughtsmanship and the clarity of my colors to be the strongest part of my paintings. I will then transfer a very minimal drawing to my paper or canvas.

Although I have made a study of composition and detail in my working drawing, my painting will make different demands upon my understanding of the essence of what I am painting and the truth about those objects as light defines the surfaces."

"As an Indiana artist, I feel the love of the land and this place as strongly as those who painted before me; George Winter, T.C. Steele, and Harry Davis. My paintings are a red brick farmhouse, the inside pocket courtyard of a downtown retail district, a small country church with its bell still in the tower or a jimsonweed climbing the barbed wire of a weathered fence post. The structures built in this community and the gardens tended here revive my spirit and provide the bonding of what man has created in harmony with this land."

"My paintings affirm the two basic truths echoed in universal order – form and color. I want the casual observer who views nature as random, chance or even chaos to look with new awareness at my repeating earth forms whether balanced symmetry or counterpoint juxtaposition. Color is my delight and provides the joy in my work which is expressed in the evolving seasons, the emergence of natural growth and as light plays upon surfaces and through transparencies. My objective is to use the discovery of organized expression in form and color to lead the viewer to a recognition of harmony of the spirit as affirmation of universal order."

ANDREA'S COMMENTS ON THE HOOSIER SALON

HOOSIER SALON PAINTINGS

The 73rd Hoosier Salon was held in March at the Indiana State Museum in Indianapolis. The first show was held in 1925 at the Marshall Field Company galleries in Chicago to promote Indiana art and artists. Exhibiting in this show is a spring ritual which Indiana artists throughout the state look forward to participating in as a part of our state's unique tradition.

When I became a graduate art student at John Herron Art Institute in Indianapolis I quickly learned of the importance of this show to Edmund Brucker, who taught my portrait painting classes and more significantly, Harry Davis, my life drawing teacher and the man I am most indebted to, today, as having the greatest influence in developing the style which is the most recognizable in my work. Both men still exhibit in every show and Harry Davis has probably won more Best of Show awards than any other artist.

Note the large brush in my hand as I execute what Harry Davis referred to in his class as one of my "juicy" watercolors.

This picture shows one of my paintings on display today as it was exhibited in the 1996 Hoosier Salon Show with Harry Davis' Best of Show painting "Circle City Carnival '95" on the far right.
